Techniques that teachers can use to support critical thinking are presented in Figure 4.4. Additional ideas are listed in the Guidelines section of this chapter. As Weiler (2004) notes, often students who are in a dualistic stage of intellectual development, in which they see everything as either right or wrong, will need a gradual introduction to the idea that not everything is so clear-cut.

Social studies is discussed in this chapter, and the premise that one cannot discover that which already belongs to someone else is discussed. An example of this would be Christopher Columbus "discovering" the new world (Ladson-Billings, 2009, p. 101). Teachers in this study viewed education and knowledge as vehicles for emancipation.

Dolores Durkin's research in 1979 showed that most teachers asked students questions after they had read, as opposed to questioning to improve comprehension before or while they read. In the late 1990s, further research (Pressley, et al. 1998) revealed that despite the abundance of research supporting questioning before, during, and after ...
