Cognitive ethologist Bekoff (The Emotional Lives of Animals) and philosopher Pierce (Morality Play) explore the moral lives of such commonly studied animals as primates, wolves, household rodents, elephants, dolphins—and a few uncommon critters as well. Citing too few examples (though the authors say that the more we look, the more we'll see) and too many term definitions, this book presents studies of rats refusing to obtain food if it means hurting another rat; the care given by ...

Wild Justice: The Moral Lives of Animals. University of Chicago Press, 208 pp., 2009; $26. Marc Bekoff and Jessica Pierce. As a child of the '60s, I learned about humankind's separation from and dominion over "the animals.". Toolmaking, morality and opposable thumbs were said to be elements of that separation. Well, we still have those thumbs.
